

The key to building effective project management competency is not managing each project as a single case; rather, it is helping the organization manage all its projects. This incremental process improves the overall delivery capacity of an organization. Ultimately our clients achieve greater effectiveness that positively impacts bottom line efficiencies.

Projects Create Change

Definition of a project: Project Management Institute (PMI) tells us a project is a “temporary endeavor undertaken to create a unique product or service.”

Projects are about change. We enable businesses to manage any change within their organization. We empower our clients to get from strategies and plans to implementation by utilizing project leadership methodologies.

Projects start with a vision, an idea, something you want to accomplish. Something will change as a result of having done the "project" – a new product, a new process or service, a different way for a system to handle a particular transaction or a new way to research a problem in the classroom.

The project manager escalates issues for resolution to ensure the project stays on schedule, manages changes to the vision and scope of the project, revises the plan where needed, communicates status and keeps everyone moving in the same direction, toward the same goal. And finally, when the project is done, declares it so by clearly defining what has been implemented, built, started or opened and comparing that to the original vision - this is what we wanted to do, and this is what we have created!
